Painting Music: Paul Klee

Ancient Sound (1925)

Klee's most well-known paintings - bold lines across coloured squares - were a product of a disabling illness late in his life. Like Matisse's famous paper cut-outs, produced after the artist became blind, Klee managed to transform his disability into a more profound art.

Ikons/icons

- Icons are of great importance to Orthodox Christians.
- Beautiful and elaborate paintings are described as "windows into the kingdom of God".
- They are used in worship both in the decoration of the church and for private homes.

Ikons/icons (5:00)

(audio file)

- The icon is seen as both a form of prayer and a means to prayer.
- They depict Christ, his All-holy Mother, the Saints, scenes from the Bible and the lives of the Saints.
- The iconographer prepares for the painting of an icon with prayer and fasting. By worshipping at the Icon the Orthodox Christian enters into a sacred place with God.

Ikons/icons: The Last Sleep of the Virgin (1991)

(audio file)

- The icon is venerated and often candles and oil lamps are burnt before them. The worshipper kisses the icon making the sign of the Cross and may kneel or prostrate before it.
- In most Orthodox churches the Altar, or sanctuary, is separated from the main body of the church by a solid screen (iconostasis), pierced by three doors, the one in the centre being known as the Holy door. The screen is decorated with icons, of which the principal ones are those on either side of the Holy Door of Christ and the Mother of God.
- These are normally flanked by ones of St John the Baptist and of the Saint, or Feast, to which the church is dedicated. In Russian churches the iconostasis normally forms a solid wall decorated with four or five rows of icons according to an elaborate traditional arrangement.
- The composer Sir John Tavener is one of Britain's most famous followers of Orthodox Christianity.
